Companion dogs, also referred to as support dogs, serve as constant companions in the lives of those who have anxiety or emotional distress on their own.

A sense of freedom and independence that comes from having a companion dog can help anxiety sufferers face their daily lives with confidence and well-being. Many dog owners experience a sense of calmness in situations where they might otherwise be paralysed by anxiety or sadness without the company of a companion dog.

For some of us something as basic as a comforting animal's presence when we are at home is enough, but for others having the constant presence of a support dog can make the world of difference enabling us to enter outside into the community.

Oftentimes, companion dogs are recommended or prescribed by doctors, psychologists or OT's for their patients.

Under the NDIS scheme Pawfect Communities supports people to make lifestyle choices, achieve goals; increase independence, increase community involvement, education opportunities, or any other area of their life they wish to explore.

Pawfect Communities are ready to take this journey with you and ensure you have access to support and services as you navigate your chosen path.
